Panama

Until the late 1990s, Panama's casino industry was owned by the country's government. At the end of the decade, however, gaming establishments were privatized.

Today casinos, lotteries, bingo, slot halls, race wagering, and sports betting are all legal in the country. Panama also offers licenses for online casinos.

Casino and Card Room Gaming

The gaming industry in Panama is controlled by the Panama Gaming Control Board (Junta de Control de Juegos), established in 1947. Panama's gaming law demands that gaming establishments turn 80% of their profits over to the government. The country's casinos were originally owned by the state but were privatized in 1997. Most of Panama's casinos are the main attraction in large-scale casino resorts. Panama also licenses bingo halls and gaming machines outside casinos.

Casinos are allowed to open only in hotels with at least 300 rooms and a five-star rating. Slot halls do not need to meet these requirements, but are not allowed to offer table games.

Slot machines in Panama are divided into three classes: A, B, and C. Class A machines allow players to use cash, don't have a payout ceiling, and may only operate in casinos or slot halls. Type B machines can only read and pay out via player cards and they have a max bet of USD 5 and max payout of USD 5,000. Type C machines also can only accept cards, but their max bet is limited to USD 3 and payout is capped at USD 200. Type B and C machines can be located outside casinos and slot halls.

Lotteries

Lotteries have existed in Panama since 1872, when the first lottery was established to benefit educational causes. Panama's national lottery, the Lotería Nacional de Beneficencia, was established in 1914. The company is wholly owned by the government and sells lottery tickets at retail locations throughout the country.

Race Wagering

There are both ontrack betting and offtrack betting in Panama. Hipódromo Presidente Remón is the country's main track. It has been in operation since 1922. The track has slot machines in addition to live racing and betting services. Additionally, there are over 80 betting shops throughout the country. Race wagering is contracted to private companies by the Panama Gaming Control Board and is heavily taxed by the government.

Online Gaming

Panama began licensing and regulating online gaming in 2002 when it adopted Resolution No. 65.

The Gaming Control Board issues seven-year licenses to online gaming operators, and it doesn't restrict the types of betting that can be offered.

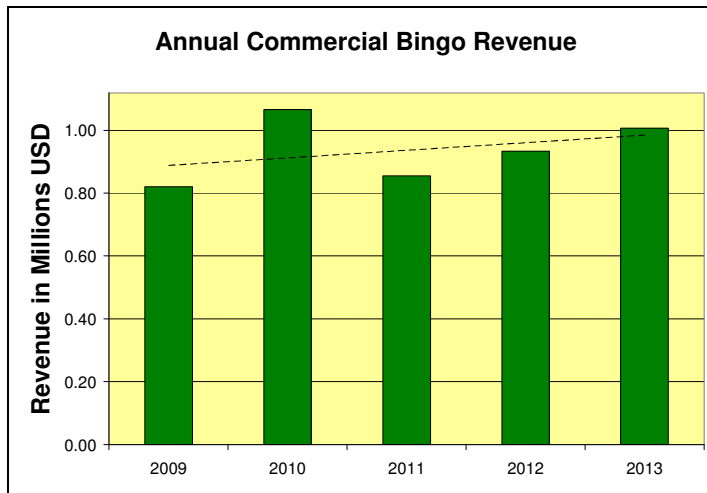

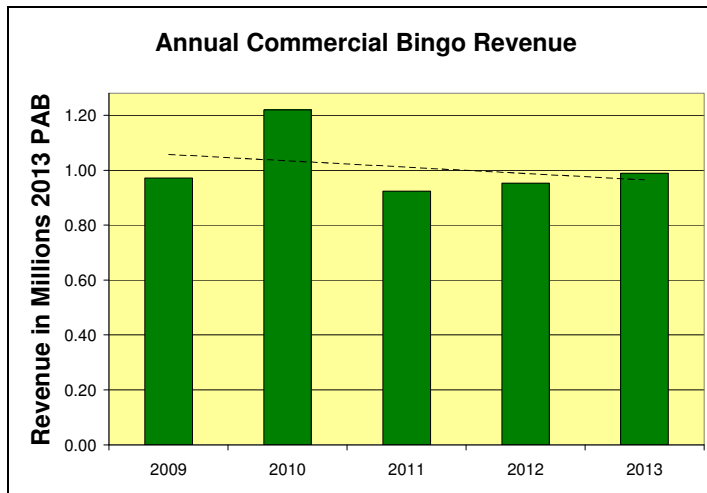

The initial licensing fee is USD 40,000, with a USD 20,000 annual fee thereafter.

Licensed operators must not allow citizens of Panama to engage in online gambling activities.

Internet businesses are exempt from contributions, duties, or import fees on all machinery, equipment, furniture, vehicles, appliances, or materials necessary for the development of the project. This also includes an exemption from Panama's income tax and national direct tax on capital. Dividends and interest on securities issued by the company and traded in local or international markets are also exempt from any national direct tax.

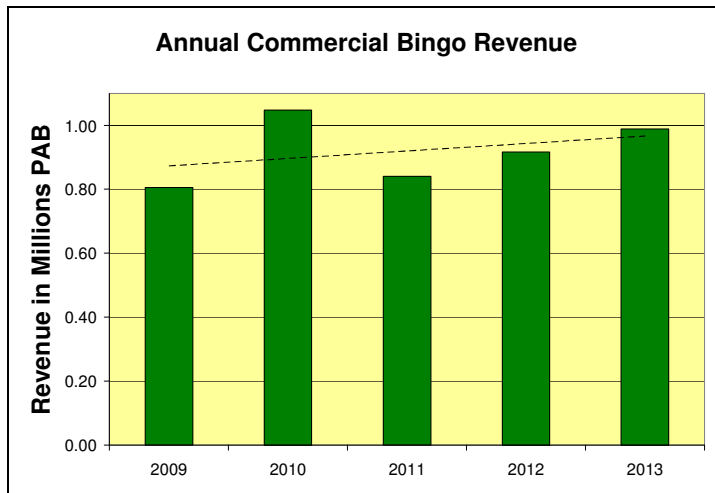

Commercial Bingo

Commercial bingo is legal in Panama. Bingo halls must be licensed through the Gambling Control Board of the Republic of Panama.
